

Beats the Heck out of the U-Haul Experience

For all those who've ever had to use U-Haul or Ryder to move your stuff into or out of storage - forget your troubles - Love Box Shanghai raises the bar for the whole industry.

I had dreaded moving out of my apartment and storing my things - because it is such a major pain, and I'd done it way too many times in the past. But Love Box pretty much handled the whole thing for me, and all I needed to do was sort of sit back in an easy chair and direct things. Love Box arranged the truck, the driver and two movers - who came out, loaded everything, drove back to the storage facility, unloaded it, then placed it into the storage space according to my access needs.

Anybody who's ever had to try to arrange help for a move, knows that a six-pack and a pizza no longer hack it with friends, who wisely scatter and hide in corners as you come around looking for help with your grand piano and anvil collection. But Love Box's movers are onsite staff, who are available, vetted and accountable for your move-in or move-out process.

The storage facility is brand-new, brightly lit and has a great security system. Plus, it's humidity controlled, which was important for my musical instruments.

Love Box retains a very friendly, competent staff, who know the needs of people needing storage space, and how to run operations according to what we're all familiar with back West. They just take the whole thing a mega-step further. I highly recommend them, and am very thankful that they're very economical and client friendly - since they're also the only genuine provider in town.

For those of you who may be curious, I have no affiliation with Love Box, other than having all my stuff stored at their place.
